

Untitled Comet Fanfic

In a rare instance of employee attendance, Kara Danvers sat at her desk, sighing to herself as she stared at the blinking text cursor of a blank word document.

"What's got you down?," William asked, popping up behind her with a cup of coffee and a box of donuts in hand.

"It's nothing," Kara said, thanking with a smile as she took the treats from him, "it's kind of silly, actually."

"I like silly. Go on, tell me what's happening," he said, taking a donut for himself.

"You know Lena Luthor, right?"

"Lena Luthor? CEO of L-Corp and sister to none other than the infamous Lex Luthor? Yes, I think I've heard of her," he teased.

Kara laughed and shoved his shoulder, "well, she invited me to go horseback riding this weekend."

"That sounds great, what's the problem then?"

"The problem is that I don't have a horse."

William was confused, "does Lena expect you to bring your own horse?"

"No, of course not, but for some reason, the thought of showing up without one is embarrassing."

William bit his lip. Revealing this wasn't something he took lightly, but Kara was his best friend and he would do anything to help her. "Meet me in the parking garage after work, I think I may have the solution to your problem.

Kara arrived in the parking garage, wondering just how William would be able to help her.

"Ah Kara, there you are," William said. He looked around, making sure they were really alone. "Okay, I'm about to do something you won't believe, but you have to promise you won't freak out."

Kara nodded.

William took a deep breath and closed his eyes, Kara gasped as his body began to glow. His hair shifted from jet black to a shimmering white and grew down his back. White fur began covering his body; his face elongated, and his limbs stretched and twisted until the man that stood before her had been replaced by the most majestic stallion Kara had ever seen.

"Kara, you're here," Lena exclaimed, running up to her and wrapping her arms around Kara's neck, "and you've brought a horse?"

"Yeah, Comet here lives on a ranch in Midvale. His owners let me ride him all the time growing up. When I told them about your invitation, they offered to drive him up here."

As the women chatted, a drone watched them from a distance. On the other end of the feed, Lex Luthor slammed his fist on a table, "this is the last time my sister goes horseback riding without me!" He punched a large, red button on the desk panel, activating the drone's laser.

From the corner of her eye, Kara saw the laser, "Lena look out!" She pushed her out of the way, leaving herself vulnerable.

Not knowing Kara's own secret, Comet lept out gracefully in front of her. The blast glanced harmlessly off his pristine coat.

Lena gasped, "that's one super horse!"
